About Training Programme

In the era of globalization World Trade Organization (WTO) is the global intergovernmental organization dealing with rules of trade between countries. WTO is primarily aimed at accelerating free trade amongst its member states through the process of liberalization within the framework of multilateral trading system. In certain circumstances liberalized imports maintained by certain trade practices, nevertheless, may cause injury to an importing member state's domestic industry and that member's commitment to further liberalization might be jeopardized if it is unable to take measures to address the issue. Under WTO framework measures thus adopted by an importing country to protect the domestic industries from unfair trade practices or from unfair competition are called trade remedies. Precisely, the terms 'trade remedies' refer to anti-dumping actions, countervailing duties and safeguard measures. Being exceptions to the WTO principles of free trade, trade remedies' procedures are unique in the WTO system in giving an active role to the business community. Governments seek trade remedies almost exclusively on the instigation of local business or because of business concerns. Basically trade remedial measures take the form of border measures; they are special duties in addition to the ordinary customs duties, or in some cases undertakings, or in the case of safeguards, duties, quantitative restrictions and possibly other forms.

The high-level training programme is aimed at offering the participants an overall understanding of WTO disciplines on trade remedies in the form of anti-dumping actions, countervailing duties and safeguard measures. It will also focus on Indian laws and rules on trade remedies available under the WTO framework. It is intended to provide the participants a rare opportunity to deepen their knowledge and develop capacities on critical aspects of trade remedies under WTO dispensation.

Objectives of Training Programme

The training programme is designed to:

- Learn crucial purposes and functioning of trade remedies available under the WTO rules.
- Examine conceptual and definitional issues of dumping, subsidies and safeguards under agreements on anti-dumping actions, subsidies and countervailing duties, and safeguard measures respectively.
- Analyze substantive and procedural rules governing trade remedy investigations and applications under pertinent agreements.
- Evaluate actions and responses of member states of WTO, particularly India, in their recourse to trade remedies.
