OBJECTIVE

Human security – broadly defined by the United Nations as “the right of people to live in freedom and dignity, free from poverty and despair”

There is no gainsaying in denying that we inhabit a world affected by devastating human challenges and catastrophes. On one hand the people of the world are severely affected by human and natural disasters such as floods and drought which, if it does not destroy the physical infrastructure of their immediate surroundings it emaciate their capacities to provide for themselves. On the other hand, there is a section of the world’s population that endures suffering as a result of wars and civil strife, terrorism, cyber terrorism etc. Billions of peoples, in all corners of the world, are caught in a vicious circle of poverty, marginalization drug abuse and insecurity. Plant genetic resources are now becoming the backbone of agriculture which has both positive and negative effect in the development and on human security. Environmental threats on human security have multiplied considerably, that is also a serious issue of concern for nations across the globe. This seminar highlights these issues and challenges by providing privilege of interacting and sharing of views, concerns and opinions.

The main objective behind organizing this seminar is to provide a new way of thinking about the range of 21st century challenges in regard to human security and how to respond to them. The Seminar intends to focus on the challenges, strategies and reforms in providing people-centred approach as it is vital for ensuring sustainable development for all.

We at AIL, Mohali, are striving to provide a forum to speakers to come up with innovative and practical models, discuss challenges, latest developments and reformative solutions that can contribute further in the area of research. We look forward to your ideas how the underlying principles of human security can be applied to the 21st century developmental agendas.
